Chicago Golf Club hosts ...

The USGA's last first

The Buzz

If it's Thursday ...

It was generations ago when Chicago Tribune golf writer Charles Bartlett, looking at a schedule that required him to duplicate himself several days in succession, opined in his Locker Room column that the various golf associations should huddle and quash potential schedule conflicts for future years.

Bartlett was highly regarded in the worlds of journalism and golf, so much so in the latter that Bobby Jones and his cohorts deemed it fitting to name the dining room in Augusta National's media center in his honor after he died. Two buildings later, Bartlett's plaque is still on the wall.

But Bartlett's words, written more than once, were read by blind eyes, then and now. His conflicts usually dealt with the Chicago Amateur colliding with a CWD-GA tournament or similar local baubles.

Then there's this week, where from coast to coast in Illinois, three standout championships of national import are being played. The Chicago Golf Club scene on the cover and our first few pages herald the coming of the inaugural U.S. Senior Women's Open to the pioneer club in these parts.

The combination of a first at the first club in these parts along with the USGA flag waving above would be enough for any summer week, but the PGA Tour has gifted us with not only the regular summer picnic in Silvis – the John Deere Classic – along the shores of the Rock River, but also the first venturing to the Chicago area of the Senior Players Championship, and to no less than Exmoor Country Club, the Highland Park outpost with its own rich history, much of it authored by H. Chandler Egan.

Apparently someone in the Tour's Ponte Vedra Beach headquarters doesn't realize Chicago is in Illinois, or that many metro golf fans motor down Interstate 88 to Silvis, especially in years like this, when the BMW Championship is out of town, or just didn't mind.

In one way, golf fans could not be more fortunate at the bounty on deck. Or frustrated. Take Thursday. Where to go?

To Chicago Golf for the historic first tee shot, unleashed by JoAnne Carner, Big Mama herself?

To Exmoor to see how Illinois coach Mike Small, who still pounds the ball, does in a senior major against the likes of Bernhard Langer?

Or to TPC Deere Run, where senior Steve Stricker, eschewing a major for his age group, instead will take on the kids, including Doug Ghim, Nick Hardy and Dylan Meyer, in a quest to win a fourth John Deere Classic?

Worthy choices all, but there's only one of ye. Happily, if you can play hooky from work, you can hit one a day starting Thursday – say, a rotation of Chicago Golf, Exmoor, then Deere Run – and lounge on the couch on Sunday and wear out your remote.

It will cost a few dollars, probably more for gas than for tickets, but it will be worth it. Enjoy!

Charlie would approve

Some 79 years after his death, Charles Blair Macdonald is remembered two ways.

First, as the effective father of American golf, given his prominence in the 1890s, when he all but bullied fellow golfers and fellow men of means to starting the American Golf Association – quickly renamed the United States Golf Association – so he could play in and win a properly-conducted national championship.

Thank the lord, he won it, or Macdonald's caterwauling might have gone into the 1900s.

Second, Macdonald is considered imperious and inflexible when it came to the royal and ancient game. With this, we take issue. Macdonald was a stickler for playing by the rules and could expound on the same for hours on end – it can only be imagined what he would have said or written about Phil Mickelson's antics at Shinnecock Hills – but he was anything but inflexible. On the contrary, he was one of golf's great innovators.

It was Macdonald who invented out of bounds. Before he came along, an errant shot was tracked down and played, no matter whose cornfield or cow pasture it had sailed into. Macdonald saw that as impractical, plus he was a slicer, and when he laid out the 18 holes of Chicago Golf Club in Wheaton in the early days of 1895, he just happened to lay them out on the edge of the property, clockwise, so anyone hooking the ball might send it over the fence, while his miscues could be played from the light fescue rough.

It was Macdonald who invented building a golf course. Until he came along, the early golf architects took the natural contours of the land and reworked it only as much as a team of mules moving a primitive grader could manage. Blind shots and awkward lies in fairways predominated.

There was no other way until Charlie, a man of vision, recreated the characteristics of the great links courses of the British Isles, and a few that sit inland. To do so, he moved more dirt and sand than all the others combined, sometimes pulling it out of the shoreline and replacing it on Long Island, as in the case of the long-gone but well-remembered Lido Golf Club. Macdonald conjured up golf holes out of sand and grass seed where there had been nothing before. Every architect since has done the same.

That creative mind, we think, would have Macdonald nodding favorably at the creation of the USGA's new championship, the U.S. Senior Women's Amateur, which debuts Thursday at Chicago Golf Club.

For one thing, one of the first really fine players in Chicago was a girl, Johnnie Anna Carpenter, and she first swung a club at the original site of Chicago Golf Club in Belmont. (You can still play golf on the grounds – part of it, at least – by visiting Downers Grove Golf Course.)

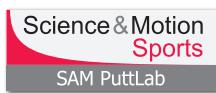

Carpenter was 14 in 1895 when she won the women's division of Chicago Golf's tournament, playing over the objection of her elders, perhaps because she had shown well in practice. Or maybe because she rolled up her sleeves! Her score of 69 for nine holes would be laughed at today, but she won the eight-woman competition by five strokes.

With that background in Chicago Golf's history, how could Charlie say anything but yes to this week's grand event at his first real club?

So play away, please, ladies, and know that this week, you're Charlie's angels.

INAUGURAL UNITED STATES SENIOR WOMEN'S OPEN

The end of the beginnings

The USGA fills the last spot in its batting order

BY TIM CRONIN
REPORTING FROM WHEATON

Typically, moods of the players at a championship run by the United States Golf Association run from foul to dyspeptic. Everyone wants to win, grabbing the glory and, at the Opens, a big check, but not everyone wants to be there.

Complaints typically run from the width of the fairways to the height of the rough to the imperiousness of the officials. By the time the bell rings on Thursday some people are ready to throw punches.

Not this week at Chicago Golf Club. The occasion of the inaugural United States Senior Women's Open has brought forth bouquets, rather than brickbats, from players delighted the tournament has arrived on the scene.

Typical of those with smiling faces is Pat Bradley, the Hall of Famer whose career included capturing the 1981 U.S. Women's Open at La Grange Country Club.

Bradley was 30 then. She's 67 now, and in some circles better known for being Keegan Bradley's aunt.

"It means everything," Bradley said. "I've been waiting for 17 years for this. There was a SEVENTH HEAVEN Chicago Golf Club's par-3 seventh, the famed Redan, will play 153 yards for the ladies.

time where I thought I might miss my tee time. It's wonderful that the USGA saw a void in their championship schedule and that void was us, 50-and-older women.

"I'd glad they stepped up. As a player, I wish it happened years ago, but I understand it takes time, the planning and putting it all together, to put a major event on the schedule."

"They did their homework," Bradley said of the USGA. "It'll be a fun week."

That feeling is universal among the women who have clamored for this to happen. The question of whether there could be a viable senior women's tour has already been answered, thanks largely to Jane Blalock, whose successful push to make the Legends Tour – the women's version of the Champions Tour – viable helped convince the USGA that a U.S. Senior Women's Open was something that should be on the calendar.

"I came out Sunday to register and just kind of walked around," Blalock, 72, said. "Several players said, 'We wouldn't be here if not for you,' and I went 'Wow!' You start thinking of the years, the process of getting here, and it was a walk down memory lane at its finest. I'm glad I'm wearing sleeves so the goosebumps don't show."

Blalock said she first approached the USGA about a Senior Women's Open in 1997, and was met with disdain by the hierarchy, including Judy Bell, Fred Ridley and then-executive director David Fay.

"There were a number we reached out to and we didn't get positive results," Blalock said. "But we planted the seed."

Since she runs the Legends Tour, Blalock wasn't often playing on it. Happily, the USGA remembered her solid career on the LPGA circuit and offered her an exemption into the inaugural. She began to cry when she got the phone call.

"It started when I got to the airport in Boston and thought, 'I'm going to the U.S. Senior Women's Open.' I was very cognizant of every step along the way. The significance of the occasion, there are no words to describe it.

It's not the first senior women's major – that honor goes to the Senior LPGA Championship, which began last year at the French Lick Resort – but it's instantly the most prominent. Those four initials, USGA, make it so.

It's unique in another regard. As Bradley said, this was a void in the USGA calendar. Barring a potential tournament for disabled golfers, it's also the last category the USGA didn't have a championship for. That makes the U.S. Senior Women's

Tim Cronin / Illinois Golfer

Open the last championship the group is likely to start. Whoever wins will be the last first champion, so to speak.

"It's very special for all of us to be part of this event," Bradley said. "I'm glad they didn't wait too much longer. The Legends Tour is a wonderful venue for keeping our dreams alive, and it's helped us prepare somewhat for this moment, but when you're playing a national championship, it takes on a bigger stage."

"I'm going to be nervous, I'm going to be excited, I'm going to be grateful and I'm looking forward to it."

While players like Juli Inkster and Laura Davies, who still compete on the LPGA Tour, Senior LPGA Championship winner Trish Johnson and three-time Legends Tour winner Liselotte Neumann are the favorites, there's no telling what might happen.

The focus at the start, though, will be on the many who are older and playing because the championship is finally here. Nobody expects 79-year-old JoAnne Carner, who will hit the first ball in anger on Thursday morning, to be a factor, but everybody is thrilled that she's here. The same goes for 62-year-olds Betsy King, Amy Alcott, Jane Crafter and Laura Baugh, 77-year-old Sandra Palmer, 64-year-old Hollis Stacy and 66-year-old Sally Little. They helped built the LPGA into the success it is today, and deserve another swing of the spotlight in their direction.

It should be quite a show.

First and foremost

Chicago Golf Club's roots date back over 125 years

BY TIM CRONIN

REPORTING FROM WHEATON

Golf would have arrived in Chicago with or without Charles Blair Macdonald.

It arrived earlier, and rather full formed, because of him.

The native of Niagara Falls, Ontario had arrived in Chicago with his parents as a youth, but caught the golf bug – after first laughing at the game – when he arrived at St. Andrews, Scotland, in 1872. His grandfather was a golfer and arranged for young Charlie to not only get a set of clubs, but a locker in Tom Morris' golf shop, hard by the 18th green of the town's links.

That was about all it took. Macdonald was infatuated with the game, and quickly became good enough to hold his own with the younger Tom Morris. Like that, this tyro from Chicago was connected with golf royalty, and soaked up knowledge like a sponge.

Upon returning to Chicago in 1875, Macdonald had nowhere to play. He and pal Ed Burgess decided to take their clubs and balls to the abandoned Camp Douglas on Chicago's south side. A vacant field would be better than nothing. Three or four holes were cut as targets and Charlie and Ed began to play golf – at least, Macdonald wrote decades later, until they were set upon and mocked by “hoodlums in the vicinity.”

A handful of others occasionally teed it up in Chicago parks until a policeman would chase them off, but Macdonald saved his swings for trips back to Scotland and England until 1892, when fellow member of society Hobart Chatfield Chatfield-Taylor – only the well-off had names like that – implored MacDonald to lay out a course on the grounds of Fairlawn, his father-in-law's Lake Forest estate.

It was April of 1892. Macdonald recalled it as seven holes, Chatfield-Taylor nine, spotted between the trees and hedges of Fairlawn, a friend's adjoining estate and a portion of the city park adjacent to Lake Michigan. It wasn't links golf, but it would do. Macdonald christened the course by driving a ball into the lake. He invited Chatfield-Taylor to do the same. He whiffed.

“Macdonald laughed, and I said ‘damn.’ That was in April 1892 – and I have been saying it ever since,” Chatfield-Taylor wrote in 1900.

Golf thus began in Chicago, though the first formal game at Fairlawn wasn't until the following Saturday, when Macdonald and Urban Broughton went around in a rainstorm. They aimed for stakes, Macdonald not yet having set tomato cans in the ground as permanent pin position. For Broughton, an Englishman, it probably qualified as a soft day.

However, Chicago Golf Club was still a year away. In his biography, “Scotland's Gift – Golf,” Macdonald notes that “at once” he began to form the city's pioneer club. Perhaps he did, but the best available evidence finds little happened for a year, when Macdonald, having cajoled fellow members of the Chicago Club, a downtown fixture, into $10 subscriptions, leased land from A.

Haddow Smith in the west suburban hamlet of Belmont and laid out nine holes across rolling pasture land.

It was 1893 when the Chicago Golf Club, with a barn for a clubhouse, opened to its membership and selected guests. Those included Sir Henry Truman Wood, the United Kingdom's representative to the World's Columbian Exposition.

It was a hit. On July 18, 1893, Macdonald, joined by Chatfield-Taylor, Broughton and J.C. Sterling banded together and filed articles of incorporation "without capital stock; for pleasure," and Chicago Golf Club was a formal entity. Sterling would be the club's first president, Macdonald the captain, following the Scottish tradition.

The game took off. Macdonald shoehorned 16 holes, then a full 18, into the Belmont property by August of 1894 – the first 18-hole course in the United States – and to celebrate the occasion, took on and beat the Lake Forest Golf Club, the successor to the informal matches at Fairlawn and today's Onwentsia, in Chicago's first inter-club match.

Like that, golf was taking root. Riverside residents formed a club, and others were being considered. Macdonald realized his club needed more room and a permanent grounds, rather than a course on leased land.

In December 1894, the club spent $28,000 for 200 acres near Wheaton, and Macdonald laid out an 18-hole course, mostly around the property's perimeter. There was room for a polo field in the middle, a spacious farmhouse that would be expanded into a clubhouse, and most of all, the feeling Chicago Golf Club was here to stay.

In May 1895 – probably May 30 – the course opened, and while Macdonald's net 97 was impressive, C.M. Sherman's net 94, thanks to a 60 handicap, took the opening day crown. Yes, there was sandbagging even then.

The course the ladies are playing this week only partially resembles Macdonald's creation. The first, eighth, 10th, 14th, 17th and 18th are essentially unchanged except for relocated bunkering, part of the 1923 redesign by Seth Raynor, Macdonald's design protege.

That was done at the instigation of Macdonald, who became a world-renowned architect between 1895 and 1905, bringing in Raynor, trained as an engineer, as his construction chief.

Since 1923, changes have been few. Tom Doak has been the club's consulting architect since 2000, but the only changes have been a handful of tees, including one on the first hole to allow it to play at 380 yards rather than the 443 the ladies usually tackle.

BY TIM CRONIN

REPORTING FROM LAKE FOREST

Eriko Gejo is the name in the headline above. She hails from Kawasaki, Japan, is a veteran of the LPGA Japan Tour, and now plays on their version of the senior tour.

Clearly, she's a superb wind player based on the 1-under-par 70 she fashioned Monday, June 18, at Conway Farms Golf Club, where a super-heated three-club wind howled from the west most of the day, playing havoc with shot selection.

Gejo's score in 92-degree heat not only won the qualifying medal for the Inaugural U.S. Senior Women's Open at Chicago Golf Club, it beat runner-up Elaine Crosby, a two-time winner on the LPGA Tour, by two strokes, and third-best Jamie Fischer, the director of instruction at Conway Farms, by seven.

"I played very good," Gejo said. "My putting was the best today. It was windy, but I like windy."

She scattered three birdies across her front nine, then hung on. The 51-year-old, a three-time winner on the Japan Legends Tour, tied for fifth and seventh in Japan LPGA tournaments last year.

Crosby's 1-over 72 looked to carry the day until Gejo, in the penultimate group, returned her card.

“Score-wise, I lived up to it, but I didn’t hit

Tim Cronin / Illinois Golfer

it great," said Crosby, 60, a 16-year LPGA veteran and now a high-school principal in Jackson, Mich. "I started with a three-putt and righted the ship on the back nine. The ball carried a long way, but the greens are hard too."

Fischer, 50 and the youngest player in the field, was more nervous after her 6-over 77 score was posted than while she was playing. She was even par through 14 holes, and then things got “dramatic,” with a triple-bogey on 15 followed by a pair of bogeys. Fischer rallied for a birdie at the last for 77, and what turned out to be a cushion.

"I was coming off a stretch of not-good scores, and I got to 18 and said, ‘Let’s just find a way to make a four here. Somehow I did.’

Fischer had 105 yards in, played her approach to 18 feet, and sank it. Playing in one of the first threesomes, she waited for everyone else to finish before allowing herself to exhale.

For Fischer, the appearance in the U.S. Senior Women’s Open is a return to a group of players she knew but never really competed with. Her mother, Andy Cohn-Fischer, was on the circuit in the 1960s and 1970s, leaving it a few years after Jamie was born but keeping in contact with many players. Thus, Jamie got to know them as well.

“It’s incredible because it’s the first, because it’s at Chicago Golf Club, which is an historic golf course for America, and for me personally, it’s cool because it’s in the town where I live,” Fischer said. “It’s terrific they’ve stepped up to host the first one. That speaks volumes about their membership and their club. It’s all new, which is exciting.”

“Many of the players I’ve known and watched since I was a little girl. To be able to play with these icons of the game, whom I’ve known since I’ve been in diapers, would be incredibly special.”

The LPGA was much smaller then, with almost every tournament in the U.S. and little money in the purses.

But if players like Fischer’s mother hadn’t worked to build it, the LPGA of today wouldn’t be nearly as large, and certainly the Legends Tour would never have started. There would be no U.S. Senior Women’s Open.

“I am 100 percent the beneficiary,” Fischer said.

After a solid career at Texas, Fischer chased an LPGA card, giving up that quest when a shoulder injury sidelined her in 1995.

Quickly becoming a prominent instructor, she coached at Northwestern and Texas, and finally joined Conway Farms as director of instruction a few years ago. She’s been named to several top 50 female teacher lists.

She’s played in three U.S. Women’s Opens and four LPGA Championships.

Also qualifying, on 7-over 78, were Kaori Shimura of Gotemba City, Japan, who was a tennis player before taking up golf, and 50-year-old LPGA veteran Annette DeLuca of Tequesta, Fla.

Among those failing to advance were Allison Finney, a former LPGA regular.

Several of the 33 players in the field did not finish because of the heat.

36TH SENIOR PLAYERS PREVIEW

Langer: I don't need to prove myself

Three-time champion lauds Exmoor, says “I just love competing and playing”

BY TIM CRONIN

REPORTING FROM HIGHLAND PARK

Bernhard Langer has done plenty in golf.

Two Masters titles. Member of winning Ryder Cup teams.

More recently, the unbeatable man to beat in senior golf. The 61-year-old German has won 37 times on the Champions Tour, including three times in the Senior Players Championship, which starts Thursday at Exmoor Country Club.

So what moves his needle these days? The quest for more titles? The influx of youngsters – as the 50-year-olds are known – coming in?

“I don’t think I need to prove myself, to tell you the truth,” Langer said. “I just enjoy the game, the competition. Meeting new people and seeing new places is still a lot of fun. That’s what brings me out here.”

This week in men’s senior golf, “here” is Exmoor, one of Chicago’s oldest clubs and featuring a layout redesigned by Donald Ross just over a century ago. Langer is an instant fan.

“I do like the golf course,” Langer said. “It’s all right there in front of you. There is no trickery about it. There’s a premium on putting the ball in the right place, and the fairways – they look kind of wide at times, but they get pretty narrow

Tim Cronin / Illinois Golfer

BIG FINISH Exmoor Country Club’s 18th hole awaits the drama of Sunday in a major championship at other times. The bunkers can be punishing.

“There’s a little bit of water, and the greens have quite a few slopes to them, pitches to them. It’s going to be a little harder than it looks.”

Then Langer mentioned the wind, which, if it doesn’t come off the lake, usually comes from the southwest. That’s two directions and effectively two different ways to play each hole.

The presence of the Senior Players – Constellation, the owner of Commonwealth Edison through Exelon, is the title sponsor – brings the 50-and-over set back to Chicago for the first time since the Encompass Championship completed a three-year run at North Shore Country Club in 2015.

While the Senior PGA Championship has made several stops in Benton Harbor, Mich., the last few years, including this May, there hasn't been a senior major in the immediate Chicago area since Olympia Fields Country Club hosted the 1997 U.S. Senior Open.

Those were still the halcyon days of the Champions Tour, with Jack Nicklaus a threat when he teed it up and Arnold Palmer around as a drawing card. Nicklaus is effectively retired these days and Palmer is gone. Lee Trevino doesn't play much either, and Hale Irwin, as regular as an atomic clock, isn't ticking off wins like he used to.

Today, the senior set has a collection of very good players who do not draw legions of fans, because with rare exception, they didn't have legions following them in the first place. The exceptions would be Greg Norman, Fred Couples and John Daly. The problem is, Norman isn't playing any more, Couples is out this week because of his constantly wonky back, and Daly, while in the field, is more a threat to make an 8 and withdraw than make the first page of the leader board.

That leaves Langer, whose consistency is remarkable, a both a leading player and one of the lead attractions at Exmoor.

Another attraction is Mike Small, the 52-year-old whose day job is coach of Illinois' men's golf team, and whose part-time occupation is pilfering purses in the state and beyond. He's played in only three Champions Tour tournaments this season, but a tie for ninth in Des Moines and a tie for 10th in Steve Stricker's tournament in Madison earned him enough points to make the 78-man field.

"I knew I had to have a top 10 finish in Wisconsin to make the field," Small said. "This is really special because you have to qualify to get in.

Tim Cronin / Illinois Golfer

FAIRWAY VIEW Here's Exmoor's 18th hole from the approach area. It only appears that the course is in front of the Supreme Court. The clubhouse is as classic as it comes.

Groupings on Page 20

I'm excited to have the opportunity to play. Majors are always something you get up for. Majors are different.

"And it's always fun to play in front of fans in Chicago. I played in the Western Open when it was at Cog Hill many times. Being at Exmoor, it's going to be a semi-home game for me. We have a lot of Illinois alumni and friends who are members at Exmoor, but I've never played there, so I'm excited to get up there and compete."

Small was the PGA of America's senior player of the year in 2017, and has coached Illinois to four straight Big Ten titles and nine in the last ten years. Several of his graduates, including Nick Hardy and Dylan Meyer, are playing in the John Deere Classic this week, as is Stricker, a three-time winner there who never gave Exmoor a second thought because of that.

"This has been a nice spot for me to come and enjoy the people and the course and the tournament and (tournament director) Clair Peterson, what he's done," Stricker said in Silvis, Ill. "So yeah, it's not really a tough choice."

The field is filled with major winners – Corey Pavin, Tom Kite, Tom Lehman, Larry Mize, Sandy Lyle and Mark Calcavecchia, among others, along with Irwin and Daly. But bet on Langer.

48TH JOHN DEERE CLASSIC PREVIEW

Youth movement

Standout sponsor exemptions include Ghim, Hardy, Meyer

BY TIM CRONIN
REPORTING FROM SILVIS

A couple of decades ago, when the Western Open was still the Western Open and played at Cog Hill on or near the Fourth of July, it acquired a second name: The family picnic.

The Western, more than its corporate morphing into the BMW Championship, felt that way. Whether it was seeing old friends or the smell of the food on Pork Chop Hill, the combination of a big title on the line along with down-home feeling brought the world of big-money golf and small-town atmosphere together intimately.

At the time, the PGA Tour tournament some 175 miles west was less regarded. The Quad City Classic was run on a shoestring for years, assigned some of the worst dates on the calendar by the circuit and, at least once, all but left on the side of the road to die of neglect.

Instead, it began to thrive. The turning point once survival was assured was the signing of hometown giant Deere and Co. as the title sponsor. When the little tournament once fronted by non-golfer Ed McMahon and sponsored by the Hardee's burger chain put John Deere in its title, people noticed.

Deere pumped money into the purse. Tournament director Clair Peterson took off where predecessor Kim Hougham left off, first by upgrading the player experience, and then employing an ingenious method: Give the few previous sponsor exemptions into the tournament he had not to old veterans begging for a spot in the field, but to outstanding college seniors and recent graduates looking for a foothold on the Tour.

LOWERING THE BOOM Bryson DeChambeau punctuates the winning birdie putt on the 18th hole last year with a world-class fist pump.

That's paid off handsomely in a succession of budding stars coming into the Quad Cities, jumping onto the leader board, sometimes winning, and usually coming back.

Exhibit A is Jordan Spieth, who won in his second and fourth visits to TPC Deere Run. He's not been back because of the Olympics in 2016, which seemed to break the connection, but promises to return.

Exhibit B is Bryson DeChambeau, who missed the cut in his exemption year of 2015, but came back last year to win. He was the 21st first-time Tour winner in Deere history, a list that includes Spieth, David Toms, Payne Stewart, D.A. Weibring and Roger Maltbie.

This year's exemptions include NCAA champion Broc Everett, an Augusta University graduate who grew up in Des Moines, Iowa; Texas graduate Doug Ghim of Arlington Heights, Illinois graduates Nick Hardy and Dylan Meyer, who recently tied for 20th in the U.S. Open, and Nor-

Hardy made the cut last year, finishing tied for 55th. Meyer missed it. The others are new to the Deere.

Hardy, who turned pro after the NCAA Championship, had already figured out the difference between pro and amateur golf.

"I think every mistake is just a little bit more identified out here," Hardy said. "I think you've got to bring your level up because the competition is so much higher. Rest, hydration and every shot really matters out here."

"You move down the leader board, up the leader board really quick, so I think you've got to be on top of your stuff."

Ghim made his Tour debut in the Travelers Championship, then played in the Quicken Loans, so he's almost a veteran three starts in.

"It's not that different from college golf," Ghim said. "In college we play a lot of tour courses, whether they're major championship courses – the only difference really is the competition (on Tour) is a little bit steeper."

"The leader boards are more bunches up. You make a bogey, instead of falling five or six spots it could be 15, some cases 20 depending on where you are."

"I've got to just be able to just put my head down and play good golf and worry about what the next shot is going to be, instead of the significance of each shot or how different everything is."

"It's the same game. I think if I can take out the significance of each shot, just focus on that, I would be able to have success," Ghim said.

DeChambeau arrived at TPC Deere Run as not only the defending champion but a winner

SECOND CHANCE Dylan Meyer shot even par 142 last year over 36 holes and missed the cut by two strokes, but he's coming off a T-20 in the U.S. Open.

on the Tour this year – the Memorial Tournament – and embroiled in one of the weirder rules issues in some time. The USGA ruled last week that players can't use a compass – like the one with the pointy end you used to draw circles in school – during a round.

"I will say it's unfortunate," DeChambeau said of the ruling. "It's just a reference tool. I talked to John Bodenheimer (the USGA's rules chief) about it quite a bit, a couple of hours, and we had a great conversation. The USGA has been really responsive. We've had fantastic talks. I'm honestly looking forward to working with them on helping make the rules better, more clear.

"It was just a device I thought had been used for a long time in different fields. It's not a distance measuring device. It's just a referencing tool.

"They didn't think it was legal, and that's fine. There are a lot of different ways to go about referencing things. Like I could use my finger or things like that. So they're working to clarify the rules in that regard as well."

"I'm not trying to push the game in any direction. I'm trying to utilize every tool in my brain to be able to reference information and get information in a way I can use it to the best of my ability."

Steve Stricker, who won three Deere titles in succession, was baffled.

"I'm still trying to figure out – I've got to ask him – what he was trying to do there," Stricker said of DeChambeau. "It's not that much of a science. It's not that exact. I've paced off some of the pin locations Tour officials pace off. They tell you it's 20 on, and it may be 20 to 23 sometimes."

"The (yardage) book can't be exact because it's some guy's drawing of it, right?" Stricker said. "It's not like he's taken a GPS mapping system to write it in our books."

Stricker is seeking a fourth Deere title this week rather than a first senior major. He could have played on the Senior Players Championship at Exmoor Country Club, but came to Silvis instead.

Finally, a football-free BMW in 2019

PGA Tour's schedule breakup includes promised move of playoffs to August

BY TIM CRONIN

Tuesday's announcement formalizing the shift of the PGA Tour's playoffs to August was greeted with big smiles by Western Golf Association officials.

Finally, the BMW Championship is moving out of football season. The 2019 BMW at Medinah Country Club will be played Aug. 15-18.

"I think it's awesome," said Vince Pellegrino, the WGA's vice president of tournaments. "Football is king in the fall, both college and the NFL."

It took years for the PGA Tour to realize their television ratings, as well as gallery sizes, would be larger in August, when only preseason games are being played, than in September. But it took golf's reintroduction to the Olympic Games for the schedule to be realigned, with the playoffs moving from September to August, the PGA Championship from August to May, and the Players Championship from May to March. Both tournaments had been played in those months in the past.

"Basically, we got everything we wanted," Pellegrino said Tuesday. "We move into August, we still have a 70-player field, are still the penultimate tournament of the playoffs."

Playing in August should also help attract families to the BMW, since the kids are out of school, and the Evans Scholars could return to their role as caddies for the pros, at least in the pro-am.

"I appreciate the Tour's continuing to changing and modifying their schedule for the better," Pellegrino said.

The realignment keeps the John Deere Classic the week before the British Open, and with only four weeks between it and the playoffs rather than the current seven, could boost the field's strength with players needing to make the top 125.

ABOUT THE DIRECTORY

This is the most complete public course directory to be found in any golf publication in Illinois. Included are all public courses known to be open in Illinois, practice ranges in the nine-county Chicago area, plus selected courses elsewhere in Indiana, Wisconsin and Michigan. Illinois listings outside Chicago area are by zone, with county also listed for reference.

Course detail (yardage, rating, slope from back tees) supplied by courses and the CDGA. Head pro or GM listed if known. Please e-mail changes to illinoisgolfer@earthlink.net. Expanded listings are available; please e-mail or call (708) 638-1164.
